

The Major in Anthropology

The Major in Anthropology consists of ten courses, to be selected as follows:

1. An introductory course: ANTH 01, 03, 05, 06, 08, or 09.
2. One course from each of the following three subfields: Archaeology, Biological Anthropology, and Cultural Anthropology. NOTE: Introductory courses may count toward these subject area courses.
3. Any five additional courses from the department's offerings (six if introductory courses from different subject areas are taken). You may choose to concentrate in one of the subfields of anthropology by taking at least four courses in: archaeology, biological anthropology, or cultural anthropology.
4. A Culminating Experience Seminar, which is designated by course numbers in the 70s, (e.g. ANTH 72 – ANTH 76). Seminars are usually offered in Fall and Spring terms.

Additionally, if you are interested in pursuing the Honors Program and the faculty approves your thesis proposal, you must enroll in ANTH 88. This course would be counted as the eleventh course beyond the ten required to complete the major.

A special note about statistics

All anthropology majors are encouraged to take a course in statistics. Students who plan to undertake independent research, especially in archaeology and biological anthropology, and any student considering attending graduate school in anthropology should take at least one statistics course: e.g., Government 10, Math & Social Science 15, Psychology 10, Sociology 10, or Social Science 10.

Major Worksheet

Introductory Course (ANTH 01, 03, 05, 06, 08, or 09):

ANTH _____ Term _____

Archaeology Course

ANTH _____ Term _____

Biological Anthropology Course

ANTH _____ Term _____

Cultural Anthropology Course

ANTH _____ Term _____

Five (or six) additional anthropology courses:

ANTH _____ Term _____

ANTH _____ Term _____

ANTH _____ Term _____

ANTH _____ Term _____

ANTH _____ Term _____

ANTH _____ Term _____

Culminating Experience

ANTH _____ Term _____